PRELIMINARY COMMENTS

SECOM Budget proposals have had some recent activity with the IC Staff. SECOM has been asked to resubmit those proposals after the first group of proposals was turned down by the IC Staff last Monday. After SECOM conversations with the IC Staff, it became apparent that although the SECOM submissions were made on 10 April to the IC Staff, the submissions had somehow "fallen through the cracks." C/SECOM will give a progress report at this meeting.

STAT

The proposed NDSS on overseas security is being coordinated this date (17 July) with member Agencies. The final DDA version is being hand carried by for review and comment. C/SECOM will comment on the status.

Chairman's brief of SSCI staffers will be a topic for preliminary commentary.

ITEM 1 Approval of Minutes for 26 June 1985 meeting

Action Taken regarding the Minutes -

- ° Harassments and Provocations study forwarded to appropriate offices for input. SECOM has granted us an extension of the deadline to 20 August since SAG asked for more time.
- $^{\circ}\,$  DOE presentation on CULTS notice was forwarded to PSI components and SEG.
  - ° SAG notified of termination of Project Slammer.

ITEM 2 Discussion and Approval of Paragraph 11, DCID 1/14.

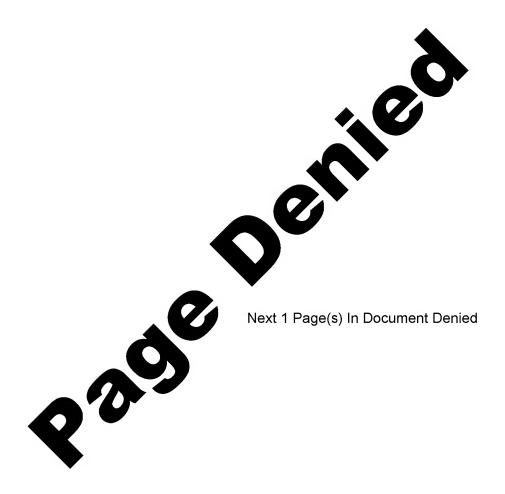

Agency response attached as TAB A. We suggested the addition of the words "prior to" to paragraph one of the document rather than "immediately following," as it refers to the time element for reporting such outside activities. We also suggested highlighting of the prepublication review provision. Concurred with the rest of the addition.

Discussion of assignment of responsibilities and accreditations regarding SCIFs.

has brought this to the attention of the Computer Security Subcommittee. SECOM staff has not had sufficient time to research the topic and will suggest a working group be formed to conduct such research. Al Petit will ask for deferral of discussion of the topic until the

A Study of Harassments and Provocations

Prepared for The Director of Central Intelligence by the Security Committee

For Official Use Only SECOM-D-222 24 June 1982

INTRODUCTION

This study describes harassments and provocations against Americans assigned to or traveling in the USSR, Eastern Europe, and China. The cases cited illustrate procedures used by Communist country intelligence and security services and are intended to support official defensive security briefings for persons with authorized access to classified information who are traveling to those areas. Material in this study was contributed by US Government departments and agencies and describes incidents occurring in the 1978-81 period.

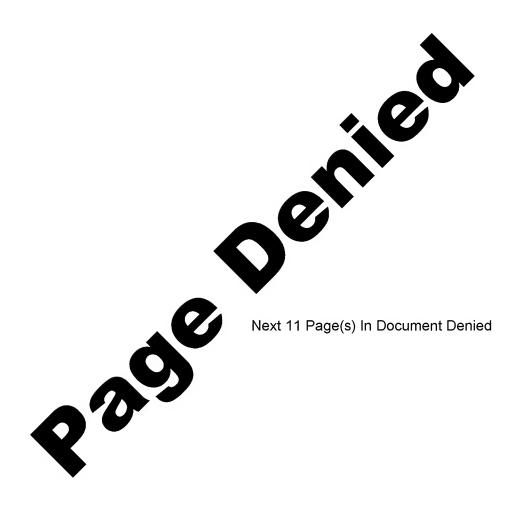

For purposes this study:

HARASSMENT means any action taken against a person or group to prevent, inhibit, or delay the achievement of personal or group objectives (e.g., impeding collection of information by assigned diplomats).

PROVOCATION means any action taken against a person or group to induce self-damaging action (e.g., attempts to involve Americans in illegal activities).

Attempts by hostile services to recruit Americans to commit espionage are outside the purview of this study.

During 1984/85 Soviet and Eastern Bloc media on a continuing basis published or broadcast information purporting to identify CIA officers. Some of their speculations are correct but many are not. One of the major thrusts of this activity is to simply harass the individual and embarrass the U. S. Government.

A Study of Harassments and Provocations

Prepared for The Director of Central Intelligence by the Security Committee

For Official Use Only
SECOM-D-222
24 June 1982

INTRODUCTION

This study describes harassments and provocations against Americans assigned to or traveling in the USSR, Eastern Europe, and China. The cases cited illustrate procedures used by Communist country intelligence and security services and are intended to support official defensive security briefings for persons with authorized access to classified information who are traveling to those areas. Material in this study was contributed by US Government departments and agencies and describes incidents occurring in the 1978-81 period.

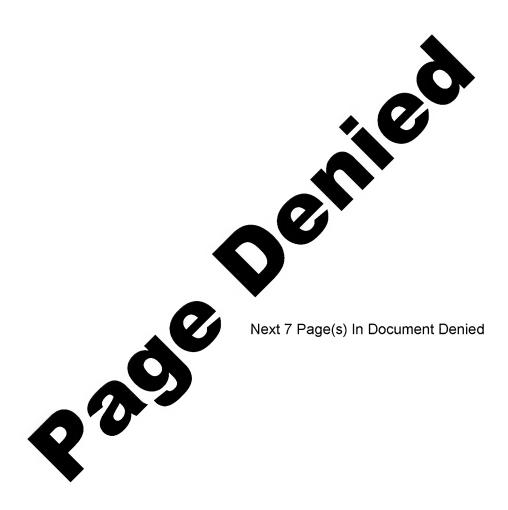

For purposes this study:

HARASSMENT means any action taken against a person or group to prevent, inhibit, or delay the achievement of personal or group objectives (e.g., impeding collection of information by assigned diplomats).

PROVOCATION means any action taken against a person or group to induce self-damaging action (e.g., attempts to involve Americans in illegal activities).

Attempts by hostile services to recruit Americans to commit espionage are outside the purview of this study.

iii For Official Use Only

CONCLUSIONS

Security officers of organizations whose personnel are authorized access to national security information should give them advance, defensive security briefings whenever they are to travel to Communist countries. Briefings should illustrate tactics and procedures used in harassments and provocations.

The importance of immediate reporting to the nearest US diplomatic post of actual or suspected incidents should be emphasized. Those being briefed should be told that, while acknowledging embarrassing of foolish acts is not pleasant or easy, failure to report all incidents involving them exposes them to the prospect of even more serious follow-up action by hostile intelligence agencies without the opportunity for the US Government to protect them. Further, failure to report denies other Americans the information they should have to avoid problems during their own travel. Assurances should be given that US authorities will provide all possible assistance to help Americans who are the victims of reported harassments or provocations. The continued usefulness of studies such as this depends on receipt of information describing new harassments and provocations. Security officers using this publication are encouraged to contact persons from their organizations who are returning from travel to Communist countries to determine what they experienced or saw in the way of actual or apparent harassments or provocations. Pertinent information obtained through these contacts should be reported through appropriate channels to the security component of the Government department or agency with security cognizance over your organization.

Harassment' in Leningrad Leads to

U.S. Warning for Travelers

By John M. Goshko Washington Post Staff Writer

The State Department, citing "approximately a dozen cases of flagrant harassment" of Americans in Leningrad during the past six months, yesterday issued a "travel advisory" warning U.S. citizens that they face danger of arrest and denial of access to U.S. officials if they visit that Soviet city.

The advisory followed an incident Thursday in which a Marine guard assigned to the U.S. consulate there was beaten by Soviet police.

Department spokesman Alan Romberg also disclosed yesterday that an American professor was arrested by plainclothes police in Leningrad on July 28 and held for two hours without being allowed to contact the consulate.

"Today's advisory on Leningrad is the first to caution Americans traveling there that the U.S. government cannot guarantee that the Soviet Union will adhere to provisions of the U.S.-U.S.S.R. consular convention, stipulating the right of access to consular officials in the event of arrest or detention," a department statement said.

Department officials said advisories have been issued in the past about Soviet travel. But, they noted, the earlier advisories have involved possible problems in obtain-

The officials said Leningrad was singled out because the majority of serious incidents occurred there. Some cases, beginning with an attack on a U.S. consular official last April, have been publicized previously, but yesterday's advisory indicated a widespread pattern of incidents involving private American travelers as well as U.S. officials.

The officials said the frequency of incidents in the Leningrad area could not be ascribed solely to tension between the Reagan administration and the Soviet government.

They gave as one possible explanation the fact that the police and KGB officials in Leningrad have a reputation for being especially ing visas or hotel rooms in some parts of the Soviet Union.

They also said that after a Korean Air Lines jetliner was shot down by a Soviet plane last September, an advisory warned that travelers in the Soviet Union might have trouble obtaining plane tickets

Leningrad rivals Moscow as the principal center for foreign tourists in the Soviet Union, and the advisory reflected what U.S. officials said was a desire to protect Americans from possible danger and to emphasize to the Soviet government U.S. concern about "unsatisfactory Soviet responses" in dealing with the situation.

tough in dealing with suspected breaches of state security.

"There have been several cases of unlawful detention of tourists by the Soviet security organs following innocent contacts with Soviet citizens," the advisory said. "During detention, Americans have been denied their rights, under the U.S.-U.S.S.R. consular convention, to communicate with an American consular officer and to be visited by him without delay. American tourists have been subjected to arbitrary and in many cases unjustifiably embarrassing searches of their personal effects..."

In describing the July 28 incident, Romberg said an American professor, whom he would not identify, was arrested on the way to a meeting with a Soviet scholar who specializes in 18th century literature and was held at a police station for two hours. Romberg said the professor was told "that a new Soviet law which took effect on July 1 did not require that foreigners be granted access to their consular representatives unless they were being deported."

Other incidents involved an assault on U.S. vice consul Ronald Harms as he was leaving a restaurant after lunching with a dissident contact in April, and the severe beating in June of Andrew Espinosa, an American exchange student.
